Case No. 2:14-cv-01584-APG-GWF

Order on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

(Dkt. #6)

23 Plaintiffs used sidewalk chalk to write messages critical of the Las Vegas Metropolitan 24 Police Department ("Metro") on sidewalks in front of Metro's headquarters and a courthouse.
25 Metro officers arrested plaintiffs because, according to defendants, writing on sidewalks with 26 chalk violates Nevada's graffiti statute, Nevada Revised Statute § 260.330. Plaintiffs allege, 27 however, that the real reason defendants arrested them is because plaintiffs criticized Metro, and 28 their arrests therefore infringe on their free speech and liberty rights under the federal and Nevada constitutions.

Defendants move to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint. They argue that § 260.330 is a content-neutral, valid restriction of plaintiffs' right to chalk on public property. But even if that is true, plaintiffs have adequately alleged that defendants selectively enforced this statute against them because of their viewpoint. This is enough to allege First Amendment and Equal Protection

1 claims. Plaintiffs also plausibly allege that Metro either sanctioned or ratified potential 2 constitutional violations.

3 However, some of plaintiffs' claims cannot survive. Their Fourth Amendment claims fail 4 because the defendant officers had probable cause to arrest plaintiffs for alleged violations of 5 Nevada's graffiti statute. Moreover, the officers are entitled to qualified immunity on the Fourth 6 Amendment claims because whether plaintiffs committed a crime by chalking on sidewalks was 7 not clearly established. Plaintiffs fail to plausibly allege due process and negligence claims.
8 Finally, plaintiffs' claims against the defendant officers in their official capacities fail because 9 these claims are redundant of the claims brought against Metro.

10 I. BACKGROUND¹

11 Plaintiffs Brian Ballentine, Catalino Dazo, and Kelly Patterson are members of the 12 "Sunset Activist Collective," a local activist group.² Plaintiffs have carried out chalking protests 13 on Las Vegas sidewalks since 2011.³ They have peaceably chalked, for example, in front of the 14 University of Nevada, Las Vegas police station; Metro headquarters; Walmart; the Clark County
15 Government Center; and the Regional Justice Center.⁴

16 On June 8, 2013, plaintiffs wrote messages criticizing Metro with chalk on the sidewalk in 17 front of Metro's headquarters.⁵ Officers confronted the plaintiffs and told them they were going 18 to be cited for defacing public property.⁶ The officers explained that Metro had discussed the 19 chalking issue with various authorities—including a deputy district attorney, a judge, and the city 20 manager—and that it had been determined marking with sidewalk chalk on public sidewalks 21

23 for purposes of ruling on defendants' motion to dismiss. Bell Atlantic Corp v. Twombly, 550 U.S.

1 violates Nevada Revised Statute § 260.330.⁷ That statute criminalizes “a person who places 2 graffiti on or otherwise defaces the public or private property, real or personal, of another, 3 without the permission of the owner.”

4 About a month later, on July 13, 2013, Ballentine and Patterson chalked more messages
5 critical of Metro on public sidewalks in front of Metro’s headquarters.⁸ This time Metro officers 6 did not cite Ballentine and Patterson; they sought arrest warrants against them.⁹

7 According to one of the warrant’s supporting declarations, Metro was monitoring 8 plaintiffs’ social media to track their activities and knew that the group was planning a chalking 9 event at the Regional Justice Center on July 18.¹⁰ Metro planned to attend plaintiffs’ protest.¹¹

10 On July 18, several of the plaintiffs chalked more messages critical of Metro, this time in 11 front of the Regional Justice Center.¹² Plaintiff Gail Sacco did not participate in the chalking 12 because she was afraid of being arrested.¹³ Metro officers watched the plaintiffs for about an 13 hour but took no further action.¹⁴

14 A few weeks later, on August 10, 2013, Ballentine and Patterson were charged with gross 15 misdemeanors and conspiracy related to their alleged violation of § 206.330.¹⁵ The two were 16 arrested on their way to chalk again at Metro’s headquarters.¹⁶ Ballentine spent three days in jail;
17 Patterson spent four.¹⁷

1 Plaintiffs allege Metro does not harass, cite, or arrest children for writing or drawing on 2 public sidewalks with chalk.¹⁸ Likewise, plaintiffs allege Metro does not harass, cite, or arrest 3 adults who write or draw messages with sidewalk chalk on public sidewalks when the messages
 4 are not critical of Metro.¹⁹

5 II. LEGAL STANDARD: MOTION TO DISMISS

6 A complaint must provide “[a] short and plain statement of the claim showing that the 7 pleader is entitled to relief.”²⁰ While Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 does not require detailed 8 factual allegations, it demands “more than labels and conclusions” or a “formulaic recitation of 9 the elements of a cause of action.”²¹ “Factual allegations must be enough to rise above the 10 speculative level.”²² Thus, to survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient 11 factual matter to “state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.”²³

12 Courts apply a two-step inquiry when considering a motion to dismiss. First, the court 13 must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint; however, legal 14 conclusions are not entitled to this assumption of truth.²⁴ Mere recitals of the elements of a cause 15 of action, supported only by conclusory statements, do not suffice.²⁵ Second, the court must 16 consider whether the factual allegations in the complaint allege a plausible claim for relief.²⁶ A 17 claim is facially plausible when the complaint alleges facts that allow the court to draw a 18 reasonable inference that the defendant is liable.²⁷ Where the complaint does not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of liability, the complaint has “alleged—but not shown—that the pleader is entitled to relief.”²⁸ When the claims in a complaint have not crossed the line from conceivable to plausible, those claims must be dismissed.²⁹

III. DISCUSSION

A. Equal Protection claim³⁰

“The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment commands that no State shall ‘deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,’ which is essentially a direction that all persons similarly situated should be treated alike.”³¹ To prove a violation under this clause, plaintiffs must show the government (1) treated people similarly situated to plaintiffs differently and (2) the government’s disparate treatment was motivated by discriminatory intent.³² “The goal of identifying a similarly situated class . . . is to isolate the factor allegedly subject to impermissible discrimination. The similarly situated group is the control group.”³³ At the motion to dismiss stage, plaintiffs “need only allege some facts, either anecdotal or statistical, demonstrating that similarly situated defendants . . . could have been prosecuted, but were not.”³⁴

²⁸ Id. (internal quotation omitted).

²⁹ Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

³⁰ Equal protection claims typically turn on whether the government’s acts survive the applicable level of scrutiny. Where classification is based on impingement of a fundamental right, such as speech, the government’s acts must survive strict scrutiny. Hoffman v. United States, 767 F.2d 1431, 1435 (9th Cir. 1985). Here, defendants have not argued that selective enforcement based on the plaintiffs’ viewpoints could survive strict scrutiny, so I do not reach that issue.

Laughlin*, 33 F.3d 60 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding that for selective prosecution claim plaintiffs must prove “(1) others similarly situated have not been prosecuted; and (2) that the prosecution was based on an impermissible motive”).

³³ Freeman v. City of Santa Ana, 68 F.3d 1180, 1187 (9th Cir. 1995), as amended on denial of reh'g and reh'g en banc (Dec. 29, 1995) (citations omitted).

violation of law if proven.³⁶ Indeed, that the government cannot discriminatorily enforce a statute based on someone's viewpoint has been clearly established by a number of controlling cases.³⁷ At this stage, defendants are therefore not entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiffs' Equal Protection claim.

B. First Amendment claims

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' First Amendment claims³⁸ should be dismissed because (1) Nevada's graffiti statute is a reasonable restriction on plaintiffs' speech, and (2) any allegation that defendants have selectively enforced the statute must be brought solely as an equal protection claim.

Regardless of whether Nevada's graffiti statute is a reasonable restriction on plaintiffs' speech,³⁹ plaintiffs have adequately alleged a First Amendment claim based on their allegation that defendants selectively enforced the statute. "[D]iscriminatory enforcement of a speech restriction amount[ing] to viewpoint discrimination i[s] [a] violation of the First Amendment,"

³⁶ In fact, defendants appeared to concede this point at oral argument.

³⁷ See, e.g. Menotti, 409 F.3d at 1146-47; Foti, 146 F.3d at 635; Hightower, No. C-12-5841 EMC, 2014 WL 7336677, at *13.

³⁸ I collectively analyze plaintiffs' claims brought under the First Amendment, including claims for free speech infringement, chilling, and right to assembly. Defendants provide scant points and authorities when addressing whether the chilling and assembly claims should be dismissed. See L.R. 7-2. Moreover, whether any of these claims is viable appears largely to depend on the same First Amendment analysis. See Mendocino Envtl. Ctr. v. Mendocino Cnty., 192 F.3d 1283, 1300 (9th Cir. 1999) (chilling claim turns on whether plaintiff has constitutionally protected speech right that was deterred); McDonald v. Smith, 472 U.S. 479, 485 (1985) (holding that, generally, the right to assemble can be exercised only with another of the rights guaranteed by the First Amendment); see also Presser v. Illinois, 116 U.S. 252, 267 (1886) ("the right peaceably to assemble was not protected . . . unless the purpose of the assembly was to petition the government for redress of grievances").

³⁹ In their papers and at oral argument, the parties extensively dispute whether N.R.S. § 260.330 applies to marking on public sidewalks with sidewalk chalk. Some courts have held that chalking violates graffiti laws in other states. But Nevada's legislative history, and the wording of § 260.330, both indicate that chalking might not be prohibited under Nevada's graffiti statute. I may later need to determine whether § 260.330 applies to chalking, but I need not reach this issue now because plaintiffs' First Amendment claims survive a motion to dismiss regardless of whether that statute applies to chalking.

1 even where the statute would otherwise be a permissible restriction of speech if equally applied.⁴⁰ 2 In other words, a selective enforcement claim based on viewpoint discrimination can be brought 3 under both the First and Fourteenth Amendments. “[T]he fundamental principle behind content 4 analysis is that government may not grant the use of a forum to people whose views it finds 5 acceptable, but deny use to those wishing to express less favored or more controversial views.”⁴¹ 6 The Ninth Circuit explains why courts must dive deeper than a statute’s surface when looking for 7 First Amendment violations:

8 Courts must be willing to entertain the possibility that content-neutral 9 enactments are enforced in a content-discriminatory manner. If they 10 were not, the First Amendment's guarantees would risk becoming an 11 empty formality, as government could enact regulations on speech 12 written in a content-neutral manner so as to withstand judicial scrutiny, but then proceed to ignore the regulations' content-neutral terms by adopting a content-discriminatory enforcement policy.⁴²

13 To bring a selective-enforcement claim under the First Amendment, plaintiffs must point 14 “to a control-group against which the plaintiff may contrast enforcement practices.”⁴³ This is a 15 similar showing to what plaintiffs need when alleging their equal protection claim.⁴⁴ Because 16 plaintiffs have adequately alleged a selective enforcement claim under the Equal Protection enforcement claim is] available, but have usually not categorized it as an ‘as-applied’ First Amendment challenge”); Moss v. U.S. Secret Serv., 572 F.3d 962, 970 (9th Cir. 2009); Hightower

1 Clause based on viewpoint discrimination, they have also adequately alleged their First 2 Amendment claims.

3 Further, for the same reasons that qualified immunity cannot shield defendants from any 4 equal protection claim based on selective enforcement, qualified immunity will not shield 5 defendants against a selective enforcement claim brought under the First Amendment.

6 C. Fourth Amendment and false imprisonment claims

7 Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment claims hinge on the allegation that defendants lacked 8 probable cause to arrest them. "Probable cause to arrest exists when officers have knowledge . . .
9 sufficient to lead a person of reasonable caution to believe that an offense has been . . .
10 committed by the person being arrested."⁴⁵ The "Fourth Amendment regulates conduct rather 11 than thoughts . . . and it promotes evenhanded, uniform enforcement of the law."⁴⁶ Fourth 12 Amendment reasonableness is therefore "an objective inquiry," not a subjective one.⁴⁷ The 13 question is whether "the circumstances, viewed objectively, justify [the challenged] action."⁴⁸ If 14 a reasonable officer would have believed an arrest was justified, based on the knowledge the 15 arresting officer actually had, the action was reasonable "whatever the subjective intent" 16 motivating the arresting officer.⁴⁹

17 The "reasonable officer" is justified in believing a crime has been committed even where 18 this belief is based on a reasonable mistake of fact or law.⁵⁰ Therefore, if a reasonable officer

27 objecting to intentionally discriminatory application of laws is the Equal Protection Clause, not the Fourth Amendment. Subjective intentions play no role in ordinary, probable-cause Fourth Amendment analysis.").

28 ⁵⁰ Devenpeck v. Alford, 543 U.S. 146, 153 (2004).

1 could have been mistaken about whether defendant's acts were prohibited by a law or mistaken 2 about whether the defendant committed the acts in question, probable cause exists.⁵¹

3 In this case, defendants arrested plaintiffs for marking public sidewalks with chalk in 4 violation of § 260.330. The statute prohibits defacement. A number of cases have found similar 5 defacement statutes violated by chalking or other non-permanent markings.⁵² Given the lack of 6 Nevada law on point and authority from other states suggesting that chalking can constitute 7 defacement, a reasonable officer could at least be mistaken as to whether the statute applied.

8 A reasonable officer could believe plaintiffs violated § 260.330.⁵³ The Fourth 9 Amendment analysis is objective, and the defendants' alleged subjective intent to selectively 10 enforce the statute does not negate the objective probable cause to arrest plaintiffs for violating § 11 260.330. Plaintiffs have alleged no facts to indicate that a reasonable officer under the 12 circumstances would not have believed plaintiffs violated this statute.⁵⁴ Because a reasonable 13 officer could have believed Nevada's graffiti statute applied to sidewalk chalk, and because the 14 Fourth Amendment standard does not consider the officer's subjective intent in making an arrest, 15 plaintiffs have not stated a valid Fourth Amendment claim. I therefore dismiss this claim.

16 Even if plaintiffs had properly alleged a Fourth Amendment claim, the defendant officers 17 have qualified immunity from that claim. As explained above in the context of the Fourth 18 Amendment claim, whether the plaintiffs violated the Nevada statute, and thus whether there was Rptr.2d 511 (Cal.App.4th 2000), rehearing denied (Apr. 11, 2011).

23 ⁵³ See, e.g., Mahoney, 642 F.3d 1112; United States v. Murtari, No. 5:07-CR-387, 2007

2000), rehearing denied (Apr. 11, 2011).

25 ⁵⁴ For example, plaintiffs have not alleged that the officers were told or had any reason to 26 believe that chalking did not fall under the statute. Instead, plaintiffs argue that the face of the 27 statute does not apply to chalking because some element of "permanence" or "damage" is implied 28 in the statute's use of the term "defacement." But the Fourth Amendment's objective standard, § 260.330's language, and other cases interpreting similar statutes makes clear that a reasonable officer could mistakenly believe the statute applies to chalking public sidewalks.

1 probable cause to detain them, was not clearly established at the time of the arrest. Thus, the 2 officers are entitled to qualified immunity.⁵⁵

3 Also, because Nevada law on false imprisonment and unlawful arrest is nearly identical to 4 federal law,⁵⁶ plaintiffs have not alleged a plausible claim for false arrest or false imprisonment 5 under Nevada law.⁵⁷ I therefore dismiss these claims as well.

6 D. Substantive due process claim

7 “Where a particular amendment provides an explicit textual source of constitutional 8 protection against a particular sort of government behavior, that Amendment, not the more 9 generalized notion of substantive due process, must be the guide for analyzing plaintiffs’ 10 claims.”⁵⁸ Here, all of plaintiffs’ claims fall directly under the First Amendment, Fourth 11 Amendment, or Equal Protection Clause. Plaintiffs provide no authority or analysis suggesting 12 that any of their constitutional claims do not arise from one of these explicit sources of 13 constitutional protection. I therefore dismiss plaintiffs’ substantive due process claims.

14 E. Procedural due process claim

15 A “procedural due process claim challenges the procedures used in effecting a 16 deprivation.”⁵⁹ To adequately allege a claim for procedural due process, a plaintiff must establish 17 the existence of a life, liberty, or property interest for which the protection is sought,⁶⁰ and allege 18 what process was constitutionally inadequate.⁶¹

20 ⁵⁵ Wood v. Moss, 134 S. Ct. 2056, 2066-67, 188 L. Ed. 2d 1039 (2014).

 22 officer is authorized by state statute to detain any person whom the officer encounters under circumstances which reasonably indicate that the person has committed, is committing or is about to commit a crime.”).

23 ⁵⁷ Fayer v. Vaughn, 649 F.3d 1061, 1064-65 (9th Cir. 2011) (dismissing Nevada false 24 imprisonment claims because the plaintiff failed to allege Fourth Amendment claims).

28 ⁶¹ Zinerman v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 126 (1990).

1 “Failure to observe the requirements of the fourth amendment will not support an 2 independent claim for a failure of due process, particularly . . . where the facts supporting each 3 claim are identical.”⁶² “If the fourth amendment, which specifically governs the standards of 4 arrest has not been breached, neither will the plaintiff be able to state a claim under the more 5 general fourteenth amendment standard.”⁶³

6 Other than the conclusory allegation that they were given insufficient “notice” that they 7 were going to be arrested, plaintiffs fail to allege what processes were constitutionally inadequate.
 8 In fact, plaintiffs’ complaint indicates that defendants gave them a month’s notice before arresting 9 them. Plaintiffs’ factual allegations appear to be properly analyzed under the First and Fourth 10 Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause, not under the Due Process Clause. I therefore 11 dismiss plaintiffs’ procedural due process claim.

12 F. Negligent training, supervision, and retention claims

13 Defendants argue they are shielded from liability for plaintiffs’ negligence claims by the 14 discretionary immunity doctrine. In Nevada, discretionary immunity applies to an act that results 15 from a decision involving an element of individual judgment, where the judgment is based on 16 considerations such as social, economic, or political policy.⁶⁴ I do not determine the 17 government’s “subjective intent in exercising the discretion conferred by statute or regulation, but 18 [rather focus] on the nature of the actions taken and on whether they are susceptible to policy 19 analysis.”⁶⁵

20 Nevada looks to federal case law to determine the scope of discretionary immunity,⁶⁶ and 21 federal case law consistently holds training, retention, and supervision activities are subject to 1 discretionary immunity.⁶⁷ This is because “decisions relating to the hiring, training, and 2 supervision of employees usually invoke policy judgments of the type Congress intended . . .

 3 discretionary [immunity] to shield.”⁶⁸

4 Plaintiffs have provided no authority or argument to suggest a different outcome here. I 5 therefore dismiss plaintiffs’ negligent supervision, hiring, and training claims.

6 G. Monell claim

7 A municipality is not liable for a Monell claim under a theory of respondeat superior; 8 instead, plaintiffs must plausibly allege that Metro was responsible for a policy, practice, or 9 custom that caused an alleged constitutional violation.⁶⁹

10 A plaintiff can show a municipality is responsible for a policy, practice, or custom: (1) by 11 showing “a longstanding practice or custom which constitutes the ‘standard operating procedure’ 12 of the local government entity;” (2) “by showing that the [relevant] decision-making official was, 13 as a matter of state law, a final policymaking authority whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to 14 represent official policy in the area of decision;” or (3) “by showing that an official with final 15 policymaking authority either delegated that authority to, or ratified the decision of, a 16 subordinate.”⁷⁰ A municipal policy, practice, or custom “may be inferred from widespread 17 practices or evidence of repeated constitutional violations for which the errant municipal officers 18 were not discharged or reprimanded.”⁷¹

1 Plaintiffs have alleged that multiple officers harassed and monitored them; requested an 2 arrest warrant; arrested plaintiffs; and coordinated with the district attorney, a judge, and the city
 3 manager. These acts occurred over the course of a month and created a high-profile public debate 4 about whether the officers' actions were constitutional. The repeated alleged constitutional 5 violations, the number and nature of actors involved, and the high-profile nature of the dispute 6 make plausible the claim that Metro instituted the driving policy behind the alleged selective 7 enforcement, tacitly approved the custom of selective enforcement, or knew of the custom and 8 failed to address it. Thus, this claim survives.

9 H. Sacco's standing

10 To carry her burden of establishing a constitutional injury to support her First Amendment 11 claim that defendants chilled her free speech, Sacco must provide adequate details about how her 12 speech was chilled.⁷² Defendants argue that "Sacco's thinly veiled assertion of an intent to chalk 13 on public sidewalks in the future does not support a finding of the actual or imminent injury that 14 is required."⁷³

15 Sacco alleges she was at the July 18th chalking event and intended to chalk in protest with 16 the other plaintiffs. She alleges she was intimidated by the police's presence—which came after 17 other plaintiffs had been cited for chalking. Drawing all inferences in Sacco's favor, she has 18 adequately alleged that she intends to continue chalking to protest Metro but fears being arrested 19 or cited given that defendants have already arrested and cited the other plaintiffs. I therefore deny 20 defendants' motion to dismiss Sacco's claims.

21 I. Claims against the defendant officers in their official capacities

22 States and state officers sued in their official capacities are not "persons" for the purposes 23 of an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and generally they may not be sued under the statute.⁷⁴

 28 Ports Auth., 316 F.3d 899, 901 (9th Cir. 2003).

1 Official capacity claims are an alternative way of pleading a claim against the entity for which the 2 defendant is an officer.⁷⁵ To state an official capacity claim, a plaintiff must meet the same 3 standard for suing a municipality.⁷⁶

4 Plaintiffs brought claims against Metro as a municipality, and they fail to identify any 5 need to maintain redundant claims against the officers in their official capacities. It is well-6 established that official-capacity claims are redundant of claims against the relevant 7 municipality.⁷⁷ I therefore dismiss the official-capacity claims against the individual defendants.

8 J. Prayer for punitive damages

9 “[A] municipality is immune from punitive damages under 42 USC § 1983.”⁷⁸ But the 10 individual defendants may be liable for punitive damages if they were recklessly indifferent to 11 plaintiffs’ constitutional rights.⁷⁹ This standard is met if defendants’ “conduct is shown to be 12 motivated by evil motive or intent, or when it involves reckless or callous indifference to the 13 federally protected rights of others.”⁸⁰

14 Defendants argue generally that plaintiffs have not made any allegations rising to the level 15 of “reckless indifference.” But taking all of plaintiffs’ allegations as true, it is plausible that 16 defendants selectively enforced the graffiti statute against plaintiffs in callous indifference to their . . . local government units can be sued directly” (citations omitted)); Busby v. City of Orlando, 23 931 F.2d 764, 776 (11th Cir. 1991). A number of district courts in the Ninth Circuit have 24 dismissed official capacity claims as redundant where the relevant municipality is also sued. See, e.g., Duenez v. City of Manteca, No. CIV. S-11-1820 LKK, 2011 WL 5118912, at *5 (E.D. Cal.

1 First Amendment rights. I therefore will not dismiss plaintiffs' request for punitive damages 2 against the individual defendants.

3 K. Leave to Amend

4 At the end of their response to the motion to dismiss, plaintiffs request leave to amend in 5 the event I grant the motion.⁸¹ Courts should usually grant leave to amend.⁸² Courts consider 6 five factors when deciding whether to grant leave: (1) bad faith, (2) undue delay, (3) prejudice to 7 the opposing party, (4) futility of amendment, and (5) whether plaintiffs have previously amended 8 their complaint.⁸³

9 Plaintiffs have not yet had an opportunity to amend their complaint in this case, and there 10 is no evidence of bad faith or undue delay. Given that I have dismissed some of plaintiffs' 11 claims, they should be permitted an opportunity to amend their complaint if sufficient facts exist.

12 IV. CONCLUSION

13 IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss (Dkt. #6) is DENIED 14 in part and GRANTED in part as set forth above. Plaintiffs' fifth cause of action for 15 unreasonable search and seizure, sixth cause of action for violation of substantive due process, 16 seventh cause of action for unlawful detention, eighth cause of action for violation of procedural 17 due process, tenth cause of action for negligence, and eleventh cause of action for false 18 imprisonment are dismissed.

19 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs' claims against the defendant officers in their 20 official capacities are dismissed.

21 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs' claims for punitive damages against Metro 22 are dismissed.

23 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that should plaintiffs wish to amend their complaint to cure 24 the defects of their dismissed claims, they may file their amended complaint within 14 days of
